

Save Thousands on Glass Brick Installations with an Early Phone Call

TO SAVE EXPENSIVE RECTIFICATION COSTS PLEASE READ THIS!

VITAL INFORMATION FOR ALL ARCHITECTS

An oversight in the understanding of glass brick installation can cost architects hundreds and sometimes thousands of dollars in rectification works. It is consistently a problem within the building industry.

Please check with us before specifying your measurements for glass brick windows on your plans.

Builders assume that all is well and build their walls based on the plan measurements, unaware that later in the project when they finally call in the glass bricklayers the news is bad - the glass bricks won't fit!

Russell Perry - campaigning to inform architects to research glass brick window sizes before they issue working drawings

This oversight may mean that the surrounding walls must be modified (expensive & often impossible) especially with engineered concrete panels that don't allow for saw cutting of structural areas around windows.

Arguments over who will wear the rectification costs could have been avoided with a simple phone call.

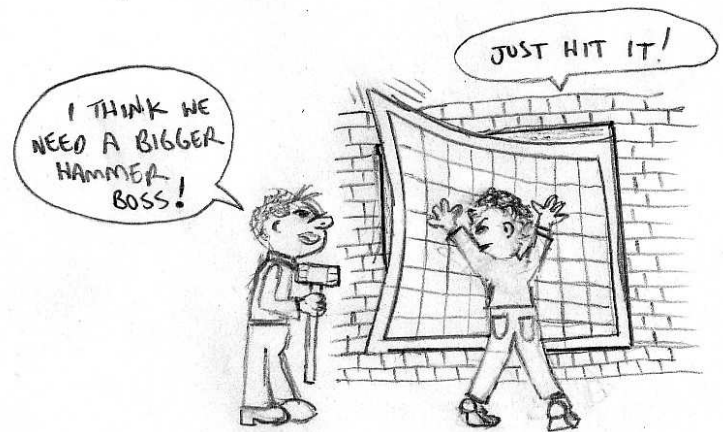

Russell Perry, Managing Director of Absolute Brilliance Glass Bricks speaks of his frustrations with this ongoing issue -

“As a large part of the building industry seldom use glass brick windows, we have found that builders and architects are, in general, not prepared for the pitfalls of inadequate preparation.”

“Our company has decided that the best way to get the message out there is to inform them ourselves. We are hoping that a focus on builders and architects should bring about a solution to a very unnecessary problem”

Russell hopes that architects will begin to make contact at the start of a project before working drawings are issued to builders so that this problem is dealt with as efficiently as possible.

“The size of the window changes between mortar, silicone and fire rated systems and again with our opening window systems”
